

ARTS COUNCIL: INTERNAL MEMO

To Will
From Rodney
Date 8 December 1987

I visited the Arnolfini on Wednesday to look at the new lay-out following refurbishment. The Video Access Library is situated in the book shop. All it consists of, besides a notice on its side behind a chair, are two monitors, each in a corner with a couple of chairs nearby. The tapes are on shelving stretching along the wall between them. There's no indication it exists and I think we can consider it effectively non-operative. We need to discuss what we should do.

Has anything further been done about Newcastle? It occurred to me we could transfer the tapes to MOMA.
