Thursday 21st June

Dear Sarah,

Thank-you for calling us about the proposed consultancy over your possible merger with Cinema of Women. We'd very much like to be considered for the project when the time comes.

There are three women working with us who would suit the job very well. Gerry McNulty is one of the directors of DVA and an experienced consultant who has worked for both corporate and educational clients. Judith Chivers is a business consultant with particular experience in the financial side of setting up and running small to medium sized organisations. Olivia Cox is one of our producers (she has made a number of educational films and videos) and would be able to provide the specialist knowledge this sort of consultancy really requires. They are all keen to do it!

You probably already know us as the publishers of Independent Media and The Good Video Guide - so you know we have a good knowledge of the independent sector as a whole. But we're also a thriving video production, design and facilities company so we have plenty of experience of the business and marketing side of things as well.

Please give us a call if you would like to discuss anything further or would like more details at this stage.

In the meantime I hope everything is going well (or at least as well as they can be in such circumstances!).

Best wishes,

David Stewart
